

Volker Henning Drecoll

Trinität

Is the doctrine of the Trinity a speculation, something of which there is little evidence in the Bible? Or does it lead us to the core of Christian theology, describing the identity of the Christian God? In this volume, the authors explore the roots and the prerequisites of the doctrine of the Trinity in the Bible and follow its development in the history of theology up to the present. In addition to this approach from the historical perspective, they deal with the question of which theological theory in particular should be advanced by a current doctrine of the Trinity and how this can be transferred to the various areas of church work. The authors also question its place in religious studies, focusing on Islam. The volume concludes with a section showing how the perspectives of the various disciplines are related to each other.

Volker Henning Drecoll Born in 1968; studied theology in Münster; 1996 doctorate; 1998 habilitation; Professor of Church History in Tübingen, with a focus on the Early Church; Ephorus of Evangelisches Stift Tübingen.
