Die Nichtöffentlichkeit des Schiedsverfahrens

Arbitration is an essential component in the system of dispute resolution, but its element of secrecy has attracted significant criticism in recent years, especially regarding investment cases. And while the topic of confidentiality in arbitration has been extensively discussed, the broad consensus remains that such proceedings are of a non-public nature. Nassim Eslami analyses the question of whether greater transparency is necessary to conform this nature jurisdictionally. The book's focus is on commercial arbitration, but questions of investment arbitration are also taken into account.
